Region Sponsors Workshop

The HSUS West Coast Regional Office sponsored a humane education workshop in Sacramento on Aug. 17, 1974. The 1-day workshop, planned and chaired by Charlene Drennon, director of education and information for the region, introduced a new program to coordinate humane education materials and programs on the West Coast.

More than 70 representatives from outstanding local humane societies and animal control agencies, as well as teachers from California and Nevada, shared their ideas on humane education.

Among the speakers were Madelon Tormanen, director of education for the Humane Society of Marin County, Greta Van der Steere, director of education for the Peninsula Humane Society, and Thelma Shipman of the Central California SPCA.

Mrs. Tormanen described classes she teaches in humane education at the Marin Humane Society's Humane Education Center, as well as the structure of courses she plans to teach on the college level.

Ms. Van der Steere outlined a complete curriculum in humane education she created for local elementary school teachers.

Mrs. Shipman told of her involvement in teaching humane education and demonstrated her puppet show format which she performs on TV's "The Brother Buzz Show."

John Dommers, director of the HSUS Norma Terris Humane Education Center, gave a 2-hour presentation on blending humane education into curriculum. Dommers described in detail the various methods and techniques found to be effective in teaching children and young adults the humane ethic. Among his presentations were poems and slide/sound documentaries.

California Cruelty Law In Jeopardy

The Humane Society of the United States has intervened as a friend of the court in a California legal proceeding which threatens to void as unconstitutional one of the basic sections of the California Penal Code concerned with the prevention of cruelty to animals.

In a brief submitted to the California Court of Appeals, The Humane Society supports the California Attorney General in the prosecution of a commercial kennel owner who was charged with not providing "proper care and attention" to the animals in her possession, in violation of California Penal Code Section 597f.

The kennel owner was convicted by a jury, but the conviction was overturned by the Appellate Division of the Superior Court, which found that the law establishes a "vague standard" for animal care and as such is unconstitutional.

The California law being challenged was purposely written to be nonspecific and is similar to those found in many state penal codes. It is intended to set minimal standards for the general care of all animals, whether they be personally owned or commercially used. Other California anti-cruelty laws cover the treatment of specific animals in specific situations.

California Penal Code Section 597f simply sets penalties for the lack of "proper care and attention" of animals. The legal argument directed at voiding the law challenges whether the phrase "proper care and attention" has enough meaning to animal owners and caretakers to give them some idea as to what guidelines might constitute criminal neglect or mistreatment of their animals.

HSUS argues in its brief that the lan-
The University of California at Davis has a signed research agreement with the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture to study the use of chemicals to reduce sheep losses to coyotes.

The HSUS West Coast Regional Office takes special interest in this agreement in that it has occurred in the midst of legal action taken by HSUS against the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

HSUS has asked a federal district court to halt a coyote poisoning program recently authorized by EPA. The EPA program permits the use of the M-44, a mechanical "coyote getter" filled with a charge of cyanide, until June 1, 1975. The suit charges the EPA with violating requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act, the U.S. Endangered Species Act, and the Federal Environmental Pesticide Control Act.

HSUS was recently denied a preliminary injunction that would have suspended the use of the cyanide device. The suit is expected to come to trial later this year.

Crucially, the suit is based on common knowledge and is taught in public schools, reinforced by parents, and is available to or possessed by virtually every person in the community. HSUS contends proper care and attention of animals means provision for food, water, air, sanitation, exercise, proper living space, and freedom from disease.

HSUS General Counsel Murdaugh Stuart Madden stated: "To declare such a statute unconstitutional would be to declare the humane movement one of the few real weapons against ordinary pet owners who neglect their dogs and cats. It would also give commercial operations a green light to increase profits and slash their overhead by reducing already minimal necessities."

HSUS feels that all humanitarians should be aware of the challenge to the California cruelty law. The HSUS West Coast Regional Office will follow the court proceedings closely and keep all humane groups in California notified of further developments.

HSUS Study
Improve Shelter

A study conducted by the HSUS West Coast Regional Office has brought major improvements to the Sacramento (Calif.) Animal Control Center.

After 190 hours of investigation, Regional Director Herbert N. Martin and Field Representative Michael Smith concluded in a report that the facility was "vile a breeding ground for disease and infection affecting animals and man as could be found in the City of Sacramento."

The report, submitted to the city manager's office, stated that among other problems the control center was filthy, allowed its animals to starve or go without medical aid, and was operated by untrained officers.

The report was released by the city manager's office to the local news media. Intense public reaction forced the city manager to direct City Engineer Ron Parker to submit a list of recommendations for improvement of the animal center to the city council.

"These recommendations compare favorably with suggestions submitted by this office," the report's lead said.

After considering the city staff proposal the city council approved a far-reaching building improvement program, as well as changes in the operation of the center. Over $40,000 was allocated for the program.

Improvements include long-range staff increases and an increase in operating hours. The center, which remains open on weekends, installation of night deposit cages, new walls to better quarantine and segregate animals, better food and feeding boxes, better record keeping, and improved instruction of the public.

"HSUS and the animals of Sacramento have won a victory," Martin said. "But the impecunious for a sustained program of pound improvement must come from the community itself through the local humane organization and the city council."

Spay Clinic Assistance

The HSUS West Coast Regional Office serves California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington. Requests for assistance on statewide or local problems in those states should be addressed to the regional office.

The West Coast Regional Office will supply local volunteers and community humane societies with information on how to establish spay-neuter programs.

Spay clinics will be established in those communities not currently served by a spay-neuter clinic. The regional office will share information it has gathered from official reports on the establishment and current status of reduced cost spay-neuter clinics in many California communities.

Humane Front
Watches Bill

The California Legislature is currently considering a complete revision of the animal protection provisions of its penal code. The HSUS West Coast Regional Office and other humane organizations have formed a united humane front to overawe package bill SB-38 as it moves through the legislature.

The bill, first introduced in 1972, is a complete revision of the Penal Code. HSUS was invited by the California Legislature to submit a draft of animal protection provisions for consideration and possible adoption into the revised code.

Since its introduction, public hearings have been held on controversial portions of the bill. As the bill progressed, it became apparent to HSUS legal counsel and the humane movement that hearings would not be held on the anticruelty provisions. In fact, no hearings were held during the entire time the bill was being considered in the Senate.

Regional Information Director Charlene Drennon became alarmed at the progress of the bill and queried the chairman of the Criminal Justice Committee, which was considering the bill. "It's a waste," Drennon told her special hearings were planned for the animal provisions.

Faced with the possibility of inadequate legislation being passed into law, HSUS sent out a special bulletin alerting other humane organizations in the state to the situation.

Committee Chairman Alan Sieroty was asked by HSUS and other humane organizations to call the telephone calls of protest from humane groups. The massive response forced Sieroty to call for special hearings on the animal protection sections of the bill. HSUS and other humane organizations participated in the hearings.

At present SB-38 is still before the Assembly Criminal Justice Committee. The humane front is continuing to watch its progress.

KIND Membership

HSUS invites all young people to join its KIND program. "Kindness in Nature's Defense is a special youth membership program developed in recent years in young people's respect for life and an appreciation for animals. The KIND program offers ideas and suggestions to members on action programs they can undertake on their own to help needy animals. For more information and membership form write HSUS West Coast Regional Office, Suite 6, 777 J St., Sacramento, CA 95814.

Workshop Continued

KIND program and on the HSUS National Assn. for the Advancement of Humane Education were available to participants.

"Domestic" described the workshop as "one of the most exciting and successful programs I've participated in." He was grateful to learn that all participants queried by questionnaire at the conclusion of the workshop expressed a desire for more and expanded workshops in the future. The representatives asked HSUS act as a link in disseminating material and providing communication among local societies. Almost all educators questioned asked for help in integrating KIND and other humane educational material into their local school systems.

Contributions, Bequests

Any person wanting to contribute to the work and program of the West Coast Regional Office is asked to send his gift to: 1713 J St., Sacramento, CA 95814. Every dollar received will be used effectively to underwrite the activities of the West Coast Regional Office. Bequests may be made in favor of The Humane Society of the United States, 2100 L St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037. If you want your bequest to be used exclusively in anti-cruelty work in the West Coast Region, simply state so in your bequest, and your wishes will be scrupulously carried out. If you now have a will that names the HSUS California Branch as a beneficiary, please change the name to The Humane Society of the United States, 2100 L St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037.

HSUS Helps Everett

HSUS has completed a preliminary survey of the Everett, Wash., animal control program.

The survey, conducted by West Coast Regional Director Herbert N. Martin, is the first step in an extensive study requested by Pat Peterson, administrative officer for Everett.

Martin inspected the city’s shelter and made recommendations toward improving its physical and administrative operations and advised the city on responsible animal regulation, in its overall animal control program.

Whale Poster

HSUS has created a “Save the Whales” poster for display in elementary and secondary school libraries. The poster, part of HSUS’s national youth membership program (KIND), describes the whales’ fight for survival in the oceans where they are commercially exploited. Accompanying each poster is a petition to the whaling nations which students may sign to register their concern for the protection of whales. Whale poster sets are available at $1 each. Write KIND, 19 S. Wirt St., Leesburg, VA 22075.
