Sexual Harassment, Humiliation and Exploitation Should Enrage You. But, Are You Supporting It?

Animal Rights International

Follow this and additional works at: https://www.wellbeingintlstudiesrepository.org/percam

Recommended Citation

This material is brought to you for free and open access by WellBeing International. It has been accepted for inclusion by an authorized administrator of the WBI Studies Repository. For more information, please contact wbisr-info@wellbeingintl.org.
Sexual Harassment, Humiliation and Exploitation Should Enrage You.
But, Are You Supporting It?

Imagine a work environment so tough you can’t get permission to go to the rest rooms. Imagine the humiliation of having to urinate on yourself because you are not allowed to leave the workline. Imagine male supervisors who try to trade sex for less demeaning work or for job protection. Imagine work so grueling it can cripple you in a matter of months. Imagine being incapacitated and then thrown out on the street with no compensation. Imagine a boss who goes to the Mafia for help when he hears you talking about unionizing to protect yourself from his abuses.

You’d certainly never support this kind of institutionalized abuse, right?

Well, that depends on whether you buy Perdue products. Because all these conditions have been described in sworn testimony to a U.S. Senate Hearing on Poultry Safety (S Hrg 102-228) by women working on the Perdue chicken disassembly line.

A Life of Danger
Perdue has been fined for willfully concealing work-related injuries from the government. None of the Perdue factories are unionized and in 1986, Frank Perdue admitted to the President’s Commission on Organized Crime that when his workers tried to organize, he went to the Mafia for help.

Sexual Abuse and Humiliation
Workers, mostly African-American women who cut up to 90 chickens per minute for low pay, are victims to skin diseases, toxic air and crippling arm and hand injuries. National Public Radio reported that workers are forced to urinate on the workline because they can’t get permission to leave their work station.

According to former Perdue workers, sexual harassment is commonplace. And according to testimony, Perdue supervisors threaten to keep workers from collecting unemployment insurance or from getting work elsewhere.

The Perdue Mentality
What kind of mentality encourages the systematic mistreatment of women? In a profile of Frank Perdue, GQ Magazine [May ’85] recorded the chicken mogul’s reaction to a woman worker: “...a cute little thing, Only weighs ninety pounds and twenty of those are boobs.”

Are you enraged by abuse and by the exploitation of women who are powerless to defend themselves? Might you, in fact, unknowingly be supporting this kind of behavior? Either way, you can act to put some dignity, safety and security in these women’s lives. And the solution to this problem is as close as your supermarket.

So What Can You Do?
Don’t buy Perdue products. Tell your friends about conditions at Perdue processing plants and ask them to join you in boycotting Perdue products. Ask the media to tell the Perdue story. If you belong to a women’s organization or trade union ask them to get involved and to encourage union organizing drives at Perdue plants. Call or write Frank Perdue at Perdue Farms, P.O. Box 1537, Salisbury, MD 21802, 1-800-442-2034. Tell him you’re boycotting his products. Demand that he improve conditions to meet accepted public standards. Please forward any responses to us. And bear in mind Perdue’s published remark to an FBI agent: “I’ll lie to save my business if I have to...” [Boss of Bosses, p. 89. Dell, 1992]

Perdue’s Pattern of Exploitation and Abuse doesn’t stop with female workers. He has a long history of environmental abuse and was fined for polluting Virginia’s waterways.

Perdue has spent millions bragging to consumers about the life of luxury his chickens enjoy. But, considering Perdue’s abuse of people and the environment, what kind of treatment do you think his chickens are getting?

Today’s chickens are bred to grow unnaturally fast. The birds can barely walk on their flimsy crippled feet and legs. They squat most of the time or breast-stroke their way, lizard-like across the litter. Tens of thousands of chickens are crowded into each darkened shed,— each bird having less than a square foot of space.

Crowded, ammonia filled “warehouses” promote respiratory and other diseases. In addition, food poisoning from poultry is an increasing threat to consumers.

Run this ad, it is not copyrighted. This ad was produced by the Coalition for Non-Violent Fond, a project of Animal Rights Int’l, Henry Spira, coordinator. For more information send SSAE to: ARI, Box 214. Planetarium Stn., New York, NY 10024.