I would like to acknowledge the important contributions to our understanding of compassion fatigue made by Zahava Solomon of the University of Haifa, Beth Stamm of the Idaho State University, and Laurie Anne Pearlman of the Traumatic Stress Institute. I sincerely appreciate the support of my daughters, Laura and Jessica, and my wife, Kathy. Deborah Salem has been a critical resource in enabling us to complete this project in a timely manner and in a highly readable form.

Finally, I offer my thanks to all of those in the Green Cross who responded to the needs of animal-care professionals, helping eight thousand animals survive hurricanes Katrina and Rita, especially Incident Commander Dan Casey; Mary Schoenfeldt, operations section chief and site team leader at the Lamar Dixon Expo Center, Gonzales, Louisiana; and those animal-care workers who responded to the critical need in the wake of those horrific disasters.

I must recognize the encouragement and support of my wife, Mary, who has made this book a reality. Her understanding of the emotional investment this effort required gave me the mental energy to continue. In addition, I want to acknowledge three of my companions who have played a major role in my life and have given me insight into compassion fatigue, J.B., Jezabelle, and Kitten.

I would like to thank Wayne Pacelle, president and CEO of The Humane Society of the United States, for his encouragement, vision, and support of this project.

It is with great pleasure that I acknowledge the efforts of my staff at The HSUS. Their support and hard work have been invaluable. Among the many, two stand out: Lisa Boan, for her excellent proofreading skills and suggestions, and Janet Snyder, for her skilled management of the seminars on compassion fatigue.
