The Marine Mammals, including whales, dolphins, sea lions, and fur seals, of marine mammals for subsistence and subsistence-level traditional native handicrafts. However, the natives are attempting to increase the number of marine mammals they may take by broadening the definition of traditional handicrafts.

To counter this attempt, The HSUS recently submitted comments to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) on the use of marine mammals in handicrafts by Alaskan natives. The HSUS told the FWS that the natives’ exception should be interpreted as narrowly as possible, in order to provide the necessary protection for marine mammals, and that no new handicraft activities should be permitted under the MMPA.

SWEDEN PROTECTS FARM ANIMALS

Sweden has passed a new Animal Protection Act which mandates that animals’ natural behavior and habits must be considered and provided for by those raising them in captivity. The act will make statutory greater powers for the prevention of cruelty to animals in several different respects. For example, cattle must be allowed to graze, and sows must no longer be tethered and must be provided separate areas for sleeping, eating, and elimination. Keeping poultry in battery cages, common practice in this country, will no longer be allowed, and permission will be required for pelt and fur farms.

Every day, throughout the world, millions of animals suffer needlessly. We’re fighting to stop that suffering. In recent years, we’ve brought an end to dozens of inhumane acts by changing laws, uncovering illegal activities and educating local governments. To continue, we need your help.
